A glimpse into Downtown history.

The Soulier House

1220 Johnston St, Lafayette LA 70506

The allure of Acadiana's historic buildings never ceases to interest me. Even if you are familiar with the history, there is almost always something new to learn. Each one has a unique story that unfolds with every visit. Take the Soulier House, for instance - a gem nestled Downtown, boasting its Queen Anne Revival style since its construction around 1916. Commissioned by the esteemed Mr. and Mrs. Emile Soulier, this architectural marvel stands as a testament to their legacy.

Mr. Soulier, who originally came from New Iberia, a prominent businessman, made his mark in Lafayette after relocating here and even served as President of the First National Bank of Louisiana. His decision to build next to his in-laws speaks volumes about the close-knit community ties that defined early 20th-century Acadiana. The Soulier family cherished this home until 1988, when it found new purpose under the ownership of the University of Lafayette. Today, it serves as the Office of Teacher Clinical Experiences. Upon visiting or even driving by, you can't help but feel connected to a bygone time, where each detail tells secrets of Acadiana's rich history.
